Information for Whānau
Support for your child, their learning and wellbeing at school

What is RTLB?

Resource Teachers of Learning and Behaviour (RTLB) are specialist teachers who work alongside schools, whānau and other services to support children and young people with their learning, behaviour and wellbeing.

How we can support

- Understand your child's strengths and needs
- Work with teachers to create inclusive and supportive learning
- Share practical strategies and resources for home and school
- Connect with other services (e.g. Learning Support, health, wellbeing)
- Work in partnership with you and your whānau
- Build confidence, engagement and positive learning outcomes

Our approach

Strengths-based | Inclusive | Culturally responsive | Evidence-informed

How it works

1. School staff will discuss the concerns or support needs related to your child, with you and provide information on our service.
2. With your consent, the school refers to RTLB.
3. An RTLB works with the school, your child and you to understand what will be helpful.
4. Together we make a plan, put supports in place and review progress.

Your consent

We will ask for your written consent before we begin working with your child. This gives permission to gather and share relevant information with the school and, if needed, with other support services.

The benefits for your child

- A learning environment that meets their needs
- Strategies that build confidence and independence
- Support to participate, belong and succeed at school
- A coordinated approach with school, whānau and other services
